

To Whom It May Concern,

I am strongly opposed to any weakening of the Telephone Consumer Protection Act. It is inappropriate for companies to be able to exert sales pressure on a household which has already made it's preference known. There should be no expiration of a household coming off a companies "do not call" list unless the consumer re-initiates contact to the company. It is essentially a form of harrassment to be called by a company once a person has expressed that they do not want to be contacted. Look at it this way, would you continue to call up a person once they have asked you not to call? It is bad manners, and strips the power away from consumers and individuals to create some peace within their home.

Thank You for your consideration of these comments.

Sincerely,

Amy Glaser